

You cannot allow the weakening of Indiana's telephone privacy law, one that protects me from unsolicited calls. The banking industry is trying to challenge the law under the "established business relationship" exemption. With this logic, everyone who I have ever bought from would now be allowed to call me to attempt to re-establish relations with me - everyone from the grocer that I bought a piece of gum from to the liquor store where I purchased a bottle of wine. Your job is to protect me, the consumer. You can't let big business sway your decisions.
